This will bring you up to speed on Oregon. Much of this you already know through osmosis...

Chris,

The subject line may be only 50% correct. I know you are not starting from scratch with CZARA, but I'll send you some links and PPTs to peruse ahead of our meeting with Lynda in a few weeks.

First, some important links:

#1) NOAA's Coastal Nonpoint Program website: <http://coastalmanagement.noaa.gov/nonpoint/welcome.html> β This is the page that I bookmark because it is such a handy-dandy repository for nearly ALL Things CZARA. Particularly useful are the links in the upper right corner. Two essential links under "More Information" Corner are:

Guidance Documents β <http://coastalmanagement.noaa.gov/nonpoint/guide.html>

State Decision Documents β http://coastalmanagement.noaa.gov/nonpoint/pro\_approve.html

#2) Under the Guidance Documents link on NOAA's CZARA website, it's good to familiarize yourself with the Enforceable Policies & Mechanisms Memo from 2001:

<http://coastalmanagement.noaa.gov/nonpoint/docs/epmmemo.pdf>

If Dov had just emphasized this EP&M memo to me in the early going, I could have saved myself and those around me a few years of embarrassment and inefficiency. It really is that key for how states describe approaches that rely on voluntary efforts to meet our management measures (our 6217g guidance).

#3) The EP&M requirements are also stated on the 6th page (labeled as p. 4) in this 1998 "Final Administrative Changes" guidance document:

<http://coastalmanagement.noaa.gov/nonpoint/docs/6217adminchanges.pdf>

This is also where we get the "15 year implementation strategy" requirement for CZARA. See the 2nd-to-last page.

#4) EPA also has a CZARA page. The shortcut for it is www.epa.gov/nps/czara. Its biggest feature is the link to NOAA's page, but it also has direct links to our (g) guidance (as does NOAA's page) and a lame PPT that explains how CZARA is addressed in our new 319 guidelines.
